SENATOR WILSON.

Senator Wilson has come, and Senator Wilson has gone. "With the blessing of God" and the Rev. Mr. FRENCH he has carried out the resolution which he says he made many years ago to speak in "these States" where the night of free speech was so long denied to him and men of his creed. He spoke satisfactorily, we hope, to himself. There are some topics less agreeable than others; it requires rare tact as well as real generosity to rejoice over a great victory without undue exultation over wisdom in playing "disgusted." If the po the conquered, and perhaps Mr. Wilson might litical fight is worth the fighting we must meet have spared us "the sermons" which he found in the ruins with which he was surrounded. ... But when we think of the past—when we recall the bitter sectional animosity which preceded the war, and of which we in this State have always regarded Mr. Wilson as a preeminent representative—when we reflect on the many themes of irritation and vindictive triumph upon which a had man or a toolish man might, on such an occasion, have expatisted, we must do Mr. Wilson the justice to say that on the whole his speech was temperate, and, from his point of view, not unfair. That South Carolina has been the leader and, as he admitted, the very able leader of public opinion at the South—that Mr. CALHOUN was the great thinker who gave shape to the theory of State rights which was put in issue in the late civil contest, is true. And when Mr. Wilson feels and says "the men of the South exhausted her resources, sent their young men to battle-fields, and made sacrifices that cannot but win the respect of the world, the Southern soldiers fought with heroic valor on more than six hundred fields," we can pardon, although we regret that he felt it hecessary to add "that slavery sank into a traitor's grave and left a traitor's name in the history of the Republic." Mr. Wilson must take another step forward in the path of just appreciation of those with whom he has fought. while a stip hears laden with corn was lately being discharged in the port of Antwerp, an immense swarm of rate of enormous size rushed from the hold and invaded the neighboring vessels, around treason," but that they were the butward expression of an inward conviction of a duty as sacred as that which sustained him and : his colleagues in their devotion to the Union He must believe that the South fought well because the South thought she was fighting for the right. And when he reaches that point he will find it easy to understand, not only how we maintained what we believed to be the struggle, but how we have konestly and man-

> "United America" which is the professed object of their love. On those portions of his speech which were specially addressed to the freedmen we will not now comment. But we will say this. Northern statesmen must not complain of the distinction between black citizens and white citizens when they themselves are continually appealing to it when no Northern orator, no Northern press eyer refers to the colored vote except as something distinct from and antagonistic to the white vote. Mr. Wilson may say that he had a right to call upon 60,000 voters to make the platform upon which 40,000 may join them. But he knows better. He knows that the wealth, the interest, the character of the country belong to that minority of 40,000, and that it must govern in Massachusetts or in South Carolina—that the hopes, the prosperity of the 60,000 depend, because the laws of society make them depend upon the 40,000, and not even the exigences of a party campaign can justify a man of Mr. Wilson's position in biscuring this truth. When the laws have provided that no man shall be oppressed in person or property, that every man shall have the right to speak and vote as he pleases, then the laws have done all they can do, and to attempt the union and control of 60,000 black votes because they are black is as unjust and, idle as to combine 40,000 white votes because they are > fully met the consequences of failure, and how the spirit of the whole people, which, in 1860, would not compromise with danger, will not,

n 1867, attempt to compromise with defeat.

We murendered as we fought, and whenever the teaders of the Republican party will trust us, they can safely trust the future of that

We would not, however, have thought it necessary to express any very strong difference of opinion with Mr. Wilson for anything said in his speech upon the Citadel Green. We would have preferred that certain phrases should have been omitted, and certain propositions limited in their somewhat dangerous generality. But Mr. Wilson was not speaking to us nor specially in our interest, and we should have let his speech pass as one of the noticeable signs of the times, and hoped that as he passed through the country his views would have become wider and that he would have returned home with better and kinder opinions of that Southern people among whom he had come for the first time.

But Mr. Wilson made another speech-a speech at the Hibernian Hall to a mass meeting of negroes, and, if correctly reported, he said on that occasion some things which we cannot pass over without protest. Without giving the precise language, we refer to the declaration of the orator that he had heard that it was the intention of the planters to discharge from their employment such freedmen as either registered themselves or exercised their privilege of suffrage-that if this was so, he pledged himself to obtain the passage of an act which should punish any such attempt by a confiscation of the lands of such employers, and their distribution among the freedmen so discharged. Language like this is unworthy of any man holding so responsible a position, and can do nothing but mischief. cusation. We feel assured that no such information ever reached Mr. Wilson from either the Military Headquarters of this District nor Wilson has done us a grievious wrong when be makes such a charge upon any such authority. The "if it is true" does not help the matter. Those in the North who trust Mr. Wilson will believe that he considered the charge probable before he made so serious a declaration; and coming from him it goes to the freedmen with a gravity which its original inventors could nover give it, and which can only excite suspicion and ill feeling. What would Mr. Wilson's constituents think of a threat of confiscation of the mill owners of Massachusetts who should be charged with an attempt to influence their employees at an election-and if the stock of the mills was to be divided among the laborers where would be the difficulty at any heated election to prove to a jury of the defeated party, the criminal interference of the parties accused.

We confess that to us this declaration out radioals radicalism-it is simply war between rich and poor, between employer and employed We will guarantee that no one case can be pro duced in the State which will support this charge, that so far from any such interference it will be found that the farmers and planters We are sending out at present, a great num- will advise their employees to register, and votes. Where there are large numbers of freedmen collected together, and where they general rule nobody anticipates either confu sion, discord, or antagonism, in the full and complete exercise of the suffrage of the State. We honestly think that the denunciation which has been heaped upon Mr. Wilson in his journey through the South is not only un wise but unfair. Of course it is not pleasan to see our own citizens gathered together to be argued and flattered into antagonism against what we believe to be our true interests. But these citizens are free and voters. , They have a right to hear. Mr. Wilson has the right to be heard. And if we think that Mr. WILSON does not speak the things we would, let us speak them ourselves. There is no use and no

> our antagonists with their own weapons. But we have the right to ask for fair play We do not object to Mr. WILSOE's asking the freedmen to adhere to the Republican party and convincing them, if he can, that it is their interest to do so. But when he comes into a community like this, which, in spite of old prejudices, listens to him with respectful attention, he owes it to them not idly or maliciously to increase their difficulties and multiply their dangers-not to listen to the calumnious exaggerations of small and mischievous men who would use his name and power for their own purposes. He owes it to himself to speak as with the authority, so with the moderation of Senator of these United States, not as the partizan orator of an Executive Committee and he owes it to the whole country that no word of his shall contribute to embitter class against class, to obstruct the peaceful solution of an issue upon which not the welfare of this State, or of the South, but the prosperity, the strength, the safety of the republican institutions depends.

Gin, as a Remedial Agent.

Gin, as a Remedial Agent.

Cin, as a Remedial Agent, Has Been in Favoving to the difficulty of obtaining a pure article, it has fallen into distise in many sections of the country, much to the regret of medical men, who consider it almost a specific in very many diseases. For all cases of Gravel, pure Gin, if administered under professional guidance, will certainly work a cure; and if taken as a preventive, acting, as it does, on the sensitive membranes, it cleanses the parts so as to remove all possible sediment. Administered in the same way, it will prevent the formation of Calculi, and do away with those terrible operations, therefore, so necessary for their permanent removal. Gin is of incalculable benefit to females in those diseases so peculiar to the sex, and from its tonic, as well aw its anodyne properties, it is frequently superior to iron, bark, or even the electrical remedies. In cases of a postive tendency to Philists, or Constantption, Gin, in proper quantities, by supplying or filling up the constant dying out of the natural fire of the system, will often entirely ward off that awful disease, which carries of one-eighth of the population of the United States annually. Pure Gin has this peculiar advantage over other diffusible stimuli, that it arhibitates without creating any thirst of an unhealthy character, it soothes while it also excites, and is a nowerful nervine as well as an active tonic.
